VOL. 32 No. 19 — CAMPBELL, SANTA CLARA COUNTY, CALIFORNIA — TUESDAY, AUGUST 13, 1929

Pertinent Paragraphs

Sunday morning the writer, with several other persons, had the pleasure of visiting the Campfire Girls' camp in Big Basin. We were greeted by Mrs. Louise Shelley, Santa Clara county Campfire executive, and Miss Ruth Townsend, group counsellor in charge of local youngsters. After an inspection of the camp, which revealed a very comfortable, complete, and shipshape estabishment, the party visited the numerous outdoor "workrooms" where the girls learn weaving, modeling, toy making, Indian cookery, and other crafts under the supervision of skilled directors. A remarkable institution, this annual camp, fraught with innumerable possibilities, not the least of which is a store of memories against later and less carefree years.

The fruits of eight years of study, research, and field work are being plucked by P. M. Weddell, commercial teacher in the San Jose high school, who has recently completed the self-imposed task of relocating the Emigrant trail over the Sierra Nevadas — the first overland trail into California, antedating, according to C. F. McGlashan, author of "The History of the Donner Party," all other early trails. The ancient trail, over which the ill-fated Donner party made its way, was tracedand marked from Emigrant pass eastward for 15 miles.

Two families, totaling 13 persons, were wiped out at a grade crossing near Dallas, Tex., Sunday. The father of eight of the victims witnessed the tragedy from his farmyard, a few rods from the scene of the disaster. According to reports, the truck bearing its load of human freight, had stalled near the track, and on getting it started again, the driver proceeded onto the track in the face of an oncoming passenger train. To us it seems that the hand of Carelessness played an important part in the wreck. Providence tried to avert the mishap by stalling the car before it got onto the track — but carelessness held a royal flush.

Monday's papers carried the story of an Oakland grocer, who, held up by a bandit, refused to elevate his hand sand instead grappled with the gunman. All he got for his pains was a bullet in the back, and as he lay wounded on the floor the robber paused in his flight to send another slug in his direction which, fortunately, missed its mark. Folks, if you should at any time find yourself looking into the yawning maw of a pistol, reach for the ceiling and continue to do so until the weilder of the gun has gone about his business. These modern gunmen would just as soon shoot you as not—most of them would prefer to shoot you. Don't give them an excuse to pull the trigger.

...rune prices are for the first ... in years nearly what they ...ld be, and although the crop ...e lighter than usual, ranchers ...a good chance of breaking ...his year. Mrs. Susan Grove, 69, widowed mother of five children, will go over Niagara Falls in a rubber ball or a steel barrel—if permitted. If she carries out her program she will probably be the deceased mother of five orphans.

That's all.

KIWANIS NOTES

A flow of reason and feast of soul was staged at the Kiwanis luncheon today when some of the club spell-binders vied for oratorical honors. The first place was voted by the judges to Nic Hedegard, who spoke on the valuation of Kiwanis from the investment point of view, dwelling on the idea of a better understanding between men and communities. D. H. Cramer was second with his thoughts of personal value to the club and community. Pres. Ed Wiesendanger stressed the point of what we get out of Kiwanis is in proportion to what we put in. Doc Merrill spoke on the fellowship and business ideals gained by the weekly association with our co-workers.

Judges were Roy Archibald, Tac Cutting and Rus Kennedy and already there are whisperings of fixings and libel suits.

LOCAL RANCHER TO SPEND 5 YEARS IN SAN QUENTIN

Pietro Scianna, a local rancher, will spend five years in San Quentin for burning insured property. This was in accordance to the ruling of the state prison board returned to the county clerk in San Jose last Friday.

Being a novice at setting fires, Scianna soaked sacks in gasoline and spread them on the floor and other articles easy to burn. He then locked all doors and windows and stood outside to see it burn, but the local fire boys arrived on the scene too soon for the fire to get much headway. Fearful that he would lose his orchard and being unable to pay a mortgage and the fact that he had five children to support, he had the house heavily insured and then tried to collect.

In view of Scianna's previous good record and testimony of some of his neighbors the prosecution did not press arson charges. JuJdge J. R. Welch denied Scianna probation and he was sent to San Quentin on April 27.

THIRD INSTALLMENT

The other passengers dawdled about, but Mem went farther and farther. She wanted to see what was on the other side of that butte as much as mankind has longed to see the other side of the moon.

When she started back the cool of the butte's shadow made her rest awhile. The heat and the hypnosis of the shimmering sand sea put her aslep in spite of herself. She awoke with a start.

The train was moving, a new locomotive dragging it and its broken engine. She ran, fell, picked herself up, limped forward.

She was alone in the wilderness, and the train was already a toy running through a gap between two lofty buttes. Both mocked the girl unendurably and she stood panting in a suffocation of fright, her hands plucking at each other's finger nails.

Then for the first time Mem understood what the desert meant to those who had seen the last burro drop and found the canteen full of dry air.

For a trance-while Mem made a perfect alegory of helplessness on a monument. She heard a voice laughing with a kind of querying exclamation.

"Hello?"

The word was as unimportant as could be and came from what she had just decreed the most useless thing on earth, a handsome moving picture actor. He went on:

"Here we are, eh?"

Tom Holby laughed at fate as in his pictures.

"I've nearly died of thirst in the desert half a dozen times," he said; "but there was always a camera or two a few yards off and a grub wagon just outside. And the heroine usually came galloping to the rescue and picked me up in time for the unal clinch. I see the heroine, but the grub wagon's late."

"Wh-what are we going to do?"

"Well, I'm not going to act, anyway ,as long as there's no camera on the job. Let's sit down and wait."

"For what?"

"Oh, I gues the train wil come back, or another one will come along and we can flag it in plenty of time. Sit down on this handsome red divan, won't you? I'm Mr. Holby, by the way."

"Yes, I know," she said, and told him her name.

There was a long silence. Then he mused alound:

" 'Remember,' eh? Great! Robina would have preferred that to the one she chose. Do you know Robina?"

"I've seen her."

"On the screen?"

"On the train."

"Oh, then you haven't seen her. That isnt' the real Robina that walks about. That's just a poor, plain, frightened, anxious little thing, a Cinderella who only begins to live when she puts on her glass slippers. She has to be so infernally noble all day long that you can hardly blame her for resting her overworked virtues when she's off the lot. I used to be a pretty decent fellow, too, before I began to be a hero by trade. But now—gosh! how I love my faults! When there's no camera on me I'm a mighty mean man."

"Really!'

"Oh, I'm a fiend. I'm thinking of playing villains for a while, so that I can be respectable at my own expense outside the factory. But I'm so mussed up between my professional emotions and my personal ones that it's hard to keep from acting, on and off. Now look at this situation. If the camera gang were here I'd know just what to do. I'd be Sir Walter Raleigh in a Stetson and chaps. But since here's just us two here and I have you in my power—or you have me in your power—I don't know just how to act. It depends on you. Are you a heroine or an adventuress?"

"I don't understand you."

"Are you an onjanoo or a vamp?"

"I don't speak French."

"Then you must be an onjanoo," he said. "In that case I suppose I really ought to play the villian and —But here comes the train. Dong on it! just as we were working up a real little plot. I hope I haven't compromised you. If you're afraid I have, I'll go backk and hide till the next train comes along. Or you can, for I imagine it's Robina that reversed the engine. She probably mised me and suspected that I was out here with a prettier girl than she is—pardon me! Shall I go hide?"

"Oh, no! no! I couldn't think of it. Nobody knows me. It can't make any diference what they say about me."

'Gosh, what an enviable position. Stick kto your luck, Miss Stedon. May I help you down?"

* * * *

That was a chapter in Mem's life. Holby had guessed right. Robina had missed him and when the helples conductor protested against the delay, she pulled the rope sacrilege of reversing the limited herself.

She knew the signals, having played in a railroad serial, and she soon had the train backing at full speed.

She had half suspected that Tom Holby had a companion in the desert, and when she looked out and saw him with the pretty chit whose magazine he had picked up, she was tempted to give the signal to go ahead again.

But she preferred to give poor Holby he ropinion of him. Mem crept back to her place, shivering with her first experience of stardom and its conspicuousness.

The train made up so much of its lost time that it was only two hours late when it drew into Tucson. Tom made his adieux and left Mem in a whirl. But her faculties went around in the mad panic of a pinwheel when a strange, sombre person spoke to her:

"Miss Steddon?"

"Yes."

"I am Doctor Galbraith, pastor of the First Church here. Your father telegraphed me to meet you at the train and look after you."

"Do you know papa?"

"No, but he found my name in the yearbook. I have found a nice boarding house for you, and my wife and I will look after you as best we can."

Mem was struck violently with the thought, "But what becomes of Mr. Woodville now?"

In her desperation she caught sight again of Tom Holby, who had walked briskly to the head of the train and was striding back to his car. A frantic whim led Mem to say very distinctly, as she passed him:

"Goodnight, Mr. Woodville."

Holby could hardly believe his ears, but he laughed to himself. "This is fame!" bowed and went on.

The Reverend Galbraith paused, but Mem urged him along, saying, "That's an old friend of mine I ment on the train." And now she felt that she had established the existence of her Mr. Woodville. She was already unconsciously "planting" characters. "His face looked familiar but I guess it wasn't."

The reason it looked familiar was that lithographs of it were posted up all over Tucson. Holby was to appear there in a picture.

Mrs. Galbraith turned out to be a joyous Western woman raised on a ranch and of a loud and hilarious cordiality. She was distressed because she could not take Mem into her own little home, but it was spilling over with children.

On the way to her boarding house she noted many of Tom Holby's portraits. He was not the star of the picture. Robina Teels was the star. Mem felt a longing to see this heroic picture, but Mrs. Galbraith would not leave her for a moment and the night was prayer-meeting night.

Mem attended the evening devotions. There was nothing strange to her in the drowsy, cozy atmosphere, the sparse company singing hymns and bowing in prayer and finding a mystical comfort in the thought of sins forgiven and in eternal home beyond the grave.

Doctor and Mrs. Galbraith took her back to her lodgings and left her. They had no objection to moving pictures and attended them often, but Mem did not know this, worser self compelled her better and she felt like a thief when her self to a dark dishonesty. Both selves went to the movies.

If the cinema store had been an opium den Mem could not have sneaked more guiltily into it.

When she had found a seat in the dark hall she was so illiterate in the staples of fiction that she tingled with excitement over hackneyed situations that left many a sophisticated child yawning and gave naver a pause to the swaying jaws of the gum-grinding crowd.

But Mem was experiencing an agitation such as she had not known since her mother told her about Little Red Riding Hood and growled like a wolf, showing long white teeth.

She was astounded at the courage of Tom Holby. It wrung her heart to see him in this Alaskan picture plowing across white Saharas of snow, to see him challenge the barroom bully and beat him down and stand, torn, bleeding, and panting, over him. Being a woman, she was not quite convinced of Robina's supersaintly innocences in the film, but she had no doubt of Tom Holby as Galahad.

In her room she remembered her parents. She had not written to them for two days and she had not carried Mr. Woodville forward.

One thing was certain, she must free herself from the Galbraiths; she must get out of Tucson. She must become Mrs. Woodville at once.

She would probably have given up trying if a bit of luck had not befallen her. Mrs. Galbraith rode over in haste and distress to explain that her husband and she had to leave Tucson for a few days to attend his father's funeral. She promised to hasten back and begged Mem Sheldon's foregiveness for deserting her. It was plainly a time for quick and decisive action.

She threw caution aside and forgot to regard the perils of inconsistency. She wrote her father and mother a hasty letter to which the lilt of hope unconsciously contributed an atmosphere of bridal bliss.

My Darling Mamma and Papa: Well, you have lost your daughter—not by fell disease, but by fell in love. * * * You see, Mr. Woodville—John—was so attentive and kind and considerate and respectful — almost reverent, you might say —and he's so big and handsome and fine and noble, and I was so small and lonely and oh, I just couldn't resist. * * * We leave at once for Yuma, so address all your letters to me as Mrs. John Woodville, so far away for so long that—General Delivery, Yuma. Doesn't it sound grand, though?

With a few lines to explain that "Mr. Woodville" was not rich—yet —She ended the letter.

She wrote the Galbraiths a similar letter and bought a ticket for Yuma.

A visit to the plant of this company is very interesting to the uninitiated. The company's business has increased so rapidly and so many improvements have been made from time to time that today they have a model industry. Everything in the plant is kept scrupously clean and it is a policy of the company to make bottled drinks that will not only pass inspection but be as near an approach to the acme of perfection as modern machinery and up-to-date methods will make it.

If the public could only comprehend how these products are manufactured by this company; could only understand how pure and health-giving they are, there would not be a family in this part of the state that would not be a patron of the place.

The demand for the products of this concern is rapidly increasing throughout this section. It is indeed a pleasure to be able to secure their brand.

In this model plant the bottle is hardly touched by human hand until it is ready to be put into the cases for delivery. LET CHIROPRACTIC BRING YOU HEALTH AND HAPPINESS

Dr. Frank A. Crowell, With Office in 901 First National Bank Building, First and Santa Clara Sts., in San Jose, is a Prominent Doctor of Chiropractic Who Enjoys a Large and Well-Merited Clientele From the Surrounding Territory. Eleven Years Service in San Jose. X-Ray Service. Telephone Ballard 86 or Ballard 4243.

In the advancement of the last decade there is no profession that has come forward more rapidly than chiropractic and in this part of the state there is no one who has been more successful than Dr. Frank A. Crowell.

He is most efficient in adjustments and analysis and his years of experience enables him to determine the cause and the adjustments that are most beneficial. There is no guess work and a consultation will prove to you the advantages of this practical science.

The science of chiropractic, which was tabulated some 32 years ago has made it possible to understand ourselves and to easier recognize the cause of disease and its effects.

The human body is so constructed that it is unnatural for disease to creep in without cause. We are born with its organisms working normally. The nerve system is designed to give perfect health to all organs of the body but if by some unnatural force these nerves become impinged or pressed upon by the bony segments of the spinal column the natural flow of life forces or mental impulses cease and so-called disease is the result.

The work of the chiropractor is to correct subluxations (misaligned vertebrae) found in the spinal column. This is done by an adjusting move performed with the hand in a scientific manner and when such adjustment is completed mental impulse flows unretarded and health results naturally.

Disease is an effect; every effect must have a cause. The cause of disease is lack of life energy which chiropractically speaking is mental impulses going from the brain over the nerves to every cell in all parts of the body.

Dr. Crowell is keen in analysis and quick to see the cause of disease. His adjustment is very accurate and the success has been marked. Look into chiropractic and consult Dr. Crowell who has a reputation above reproach and holds an enviable position in the professional circles of this section.

TWO GREAT SIXES NOW OFFERED BY DODGE BROTHERS

Osen Motor Sales Co., Inc., 230-250 North First St., in San Jose, Are Dealers For the Famous Dodge Brothers Fine Automobiles—All Seven Bearing Motors—Cars of Beauty, Power, and Economy. These Cars Must Be Seen to be Fully Appreciated. Be Sure and See Dodge Brothers Cars Before Buying Your Next Automobile.

No matter how much money or how little you are planning to invest in a motor car—by all means investigate the Dodge Brothers line of Sixes first. Then make comparisons.

Nowhere in the world—at any price—are there cars like Dodge Brothers. Greater expenditure will not duplicate them. For instance the new Dodge Brothers Six introduces more features that are new and different and better than any other motor car in history.

The chassis and body for example are a single integral unit. Body sills are eliminated. The wide, deep chassis frame flush with the body lines, eliminates the customary overhang of a wide body on a narrow frame—lowers the over-all height and the all-important center of gravity.

The car's power, pick-up, absence of sidesway at high speed, and incredible smoothness over rough roads astounds everyone who takes the wheel.

In the new Senior Six you will find features used in cars selling as high as $3000! It is motoring sensation of the year, combining in one vehicle scores of developments not previously brought together, and for the first time in this field, custom body construction within and without. Truly tomorrow's motor car presented today.

It is indeed a pleasure for us to point with pride to the Osen Motor Sales Co., Inc., for they are striving to keep abreast of the times and are offering local people real automobiles together with first class service and a complete stock of parts—which must be carefully considered when buying a motor car.

DOG AND CAT HOSPITAL MEETS WITH POPULAR APPROVAL

Dr. Thos. W. Healey, 461 N. Second Street, in San Jose, Operates One of the Most Modern Veterinary Establishments in This Section. Specializes in Small Animal Work and Is Also a Specialist in All Branches of This Profession. We Gladly Recommend Dr. Healey to All Our Readers. Phone Ballard 1819. Branch Hospital and Boarding Kennels at Militpas.

The proper care of pets is one of the most essential things in these modern times. Pure bred pets have taken the place of inferior breeds which means that more attention must be given them because of their greater value. The old time "Horse Doctor" has ceased to exist and in his place the highly trained, efficient veterinarian gives his service and advice in raising and caring for animals.

Some of the greatest scientific brains of the country have given this profession their undivided attention and as a result no branch of the medical profession has made greater advances. All that has been developed in veterinary surgery is available to the people of this territory if they secure the services of Dr. Thos. W. Healy of San Jose.

He has felt it his duty to keep posted on any new discovery since his graduation from college and as a result is recognized and consulted by many engaged in the same profession. He places his experience and knowledge at the service of a large clientele.

His disposition is such that he at once makes friends and his knowledge of small animals and their disposition makes it possible for him to handle the pets without any undue display of temper or harsh treatment. Because of his natural qualifications and training, it is not strange that he should occupy such a place in the professional world. He can be reached at any time and the reputation he has gained in his community is well merited.

We wish to compliment the doctor on the success he has made and refer him and his up-to-date methods to our readers and assure them that if they call him they will have real service rendered that is inspired by thorough training and experience.
